When someone has the opportunity to explain your brand from the moment a user logs into your website, the brand has a much stronger impact on the visitor because they immediately know what it is about, what its purpose is. and what you are trying to convey. On average, you have around 8 seconds to grab the visitor's attention before deciding whether to stay on your website or move on. If you make most of those 8 seconds useful, users won't forget your brand and are more likely to return to the site later.

If you want to define your brand, make it special by reporting the benefits directly on the home page. It is also a better way to upload a video of your company to the home page to make a good first impression. Consumers love knowing that they are dealing with a real person, not a bot.

The main process for "online branding" or "internet branding" as some call it, is identifying the exact demographic category. Example: If you want to venture into women's cosmetics, focus on reaching the brand only to women and women within your target age range.
